The incidence and risk of various cancers in a large population-based series of patients with Crohn's disease: a nationwide Swedish study. The incidence of certain malignancies has been reported to be increased in patients with Crohn's disease (CD). The aim of this study was to use a registry-based approach to identify subgroups of patients with CD at a higher risk of certain malignancies. All patients diagnosed with CD in Sweden between 1973 and 2005 were identified from the Swedish National Hospital Discharge Registry and followed for the occurrence of cancer. The risk of cancer and death within 12 months after the diagnosis of CD, and in the period up to 52 years from the diagnosis of CD, was compared in all patients with CD (n = 14,166) and in matched controls. An increased risk of cancer was seen among women, particularly for haematological malignancies. Six months after the diagnosis of CD, a higher risk of malignant neoplasms was observed, which was statistically significant for lymphoma (hazard ratio, 1.46; 95% confidence interval, 1.07-1.98), and renal cell carcinoma (hazard ratio, 1.27; 95% confidence interval, 1.05-1.54). The risk of death from any cause was also significantly increased six months after CD. Higher incidences of lymphoma, renal cell carcinoma, and other types of cancer were also observed during the period up to 52 years from the diagnosis of CD. These data suggest that patients with CD might be at an increased risk of several types of cancer.

The role of ATP-binding cassette transporter G2 in ATP-dependent cholesterol efflux to HDL. ATP-binding cassette transporter G2 (ABCG2) is an ATP-dependent efflux pump of sterol and phospholipid from cells to HDL, requiring ATP hydrolysis. We demonstrated that ABCG2 is localized to the basolateral side of enterocytes and that basolateral ABCG2-mediated ATP-dependent cholesterol efflux is significantly reduced in the presence of mevalonate. The inhibition was abolished by the addition of mevalonate-4-phosphate, a metabolite of mevalonate. To investigate the role of ABCG2 in ATP-dependent efflux of cholesterol from liver and intestine, we measured eff
