wireless communication system, a base station communicates with user equipment, such as mobile stations (MSs), via a wireless connection over the air. When communication parameters need to be changed or “mobility session” is initiated by the MS, the MS will send a handover request to the base station. The handover request may include a handover response and information such as the MS's current RAT (Radio Access Technology) identity (RAT IID). The base station then grants permission to transition to a new RAT, and the user equipment will initiate the handover. These mobility sessions may become frequent in some MSs, where the MS will
