There are two types of individuals in the Lands Between. Those who have fallen victim to the Myth and seek answers, and those who have abandoned the Myth, and want to live a normal life again. With "The Myth of Life," the players must collect blood from the victims of the Myth and recover the memories of the victims of the Myth. You'll need to build your own body in order to obtain the blood of those who are dear to you. At the same time, the players can choose to leave behind the Myth by resisting those called the "Ruined." In order to recover the memories of the "Ruined," the "Ruined" will need to build their own bodies. The more blood and memories that you have, the more "Ruined" you'll be able to build. Through blood and memories, the "Ruined" can create those who are "Elden Lords" that the players can be bound to by contracts. And those "Elden Lords" can choose to follow the "Ruined's" call. However, the relationship between the "Ruined" and the "Elden Lords" can also be changed when the players' actions change the game. During battles, the players build the "Ruined" that will aid you. These "Ruined" are created by you, the players, and the damage they take during the battles will be determined by the actions of the players during the battles. The level of a "Ruined" is determined by the memories and blood that have been collected, and each "Ruined" level can have up to three "Elden Lords" bound to it. For example, a 4th "Ruined" level can have three 5th, 4th, and 3rd "Elden Lords." The more memories and blood, the more powerful the "Ruined" will become.
