The number of PD controllers for a module controller is usually 1 to 4, but the number of modules can be several dozen. Usually, the PD controllers are installed in a cabinet in the vicinity of the modules, and the devices are typically connected to a main bus of the system by driver ICs which operate by way of a write clock signal. However, depending on the configuration of the system, a large number of cells can be present on a single CI bus. The number of modules is therefore very high in relation to the number of PD controllers, which makes the routing of a large number of wires from the modules and the PD controllers particularly challenging. The space in the cabinet for the PD controllers usually has a standardized size; the number of PD controllers available may exceed the standardized size. In known wafer processing systems, such as the one described in U.S. Pat. No. 6,525,926 B1, at least one MC controller is shared between a number of PD controllers in order to minimize the number of modules required
