FIFA is an incredibly popular sports simulation developed by EA Canada, published by Electronic Arts Inc. and distributed worldwide by Electronic Arts. At last count, FIFA is the world's largest sports brand with over 220 million active users, and is the fifth best selling video game franchise on the planet. FIFA is what hockey players, rugby players and baseball players would call a "body-checking" game - rules exist not just to break players into little pieces (and ruin their enjoyment for a few hours), but also to ensure that appropriate strategy is employed by the player. FIFA's gameplay is not only highly detailed, but it also involves time-to-time tasks that require accurate control of a number of simultaneous systems that, if not properly maintained, will cause the player's performance to drop. The player's performance is then monitored by an Artificial Intelligence (AI) -- two AIs in fact - that is designed to work out whether or not your inputs are optimal, and to take necessary corrective action. In this sense, FIFA is a sports game that requires players to exercise time-to-time control of a broad variety of simultaneous systems. Although many of these systems are intuitive to the player, the programming is detailed enough to ensure that the player's effort is extremely close to the optimal. A career mode that has been completely re-written features dozens of career paths, teams and leagues, players and stadiums, allowing for virtually limitless play and versatility. There are also three distinct modes of play that cover a wide range of styles - Ultimate Team, Seasons, and Training. Training mode allows you to sharpen your skills by exploring the variety of gameplay systems as you train your team on how to play, master and survive in any of the game's 12 game modes. Championship Cliché But FIFA is incredibly deep - its gameplay has depth that is easily comparable to (or even exceeding) the likes of the NBA 2K series, Madden NFL, NCAA Football, Pro Evolution Soccer, and so many other sports games. For example, FIFA's third person view (known as ESPN), is entirely different from other sports games - the 3rd person view of FIFA is more aggressive and high octane, rather than the standard let's move along, shoot the ball and leave it up to the engine (known as the isometric view) of other sports games. Another example - FIFA's AI's are designed to observe and learn from the player
