Structural organization of the receptor for IgA in two different human cell types. The complete sequence of the receptor for immunoglobulin A (IgA) has been determined for two different human cell types. The receptor in the K562 cell line is an alpha 2 beta 2 heterotetramer composed of two identical and non-covalently associated heavy chains. The receptor in the P3X63Ag.8.653-2 cells is an alpha 2 beta 2 heterotetramer composed of two non-identical chains. The relative rate of gene conversion between the two receptors is used to test the recombination theory for expression of immunoglobulin and receptor genes. The receptors for IgA are compared to other receptors for other immunoglobulin classes. Recent Articles The latest edition of the almanac, published in mid-2015, features Cyril Ramaphosa, Jacob Zuma and Helen Zille - but the dull-witted rubric is 'The Definitive Companion to South Africa 2017'. This is a reference book for all manner of people. South Africa's career criminals, murdered victims, poachers, thug-cops, dodgy car dealers, corrupt undertakers, inept administrators, and traumatised ex-servicemen will all find the book useful in their daily activities. It's a comprehensive compendium on the lives of the people who make up the 'civilised' world of South African politics, and includes photographs, potted biographies, blurbettes, snippets of culture and some glossy artworks. The book is written in a plodding, jargon-filled style, but has a knowledgeable, knowledgeable air about it. And there are lots of typos. Lots of typos. The book is also terribly expensive. ZAR44,000 - which is about £400, was a bargain, given the competition. The Indaba The best thing about the book is the Indaba, which is the conversation between the author and a range of South Africans. You can hear how a criminal talked to the book's author, how a killer talked to another author, how someone who is abused talked to the author. It's a fascinating insight, and is one of the aspects that the book, and the entire South African political culture, has failed to capture. For example, a kidnapper talks about how he poses as a civil servant and how that acts as a convenient cover

One of the tragic outcomes of the so-called "war on terror" is that the previous rules of war have been thrown out in favor of the now-infamous "shock and awe" principle, which calls for indiscriminate killing and other barbarities. We've seen such tactics used in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and most recently, Libya, with several large cities being reduced to rubble under the pretext of stopping an alleged terrorist attack. In the most recent and tragic case, Libya, a coalition of NATO forces carried out air strikes on the city of Sirte last week, after months of targeting the city from the air with heavy weaponry, including tanks, mortars, and rocket launchers. "It has been a very difficult and challenging mission in Sirte," Col. John Dorrian, a spokesman for the NATO-led mission that includes Britain's special forces, told the Huffington Post. "We've been hearing gunfire at locations for a long time and the people have been forcibly evicted. We have not, nor have we sought to, forcibly remove anyone from that location," Dorrian said. He and his colleagues also admitted to using the "shock and awe" tactic to distract the population of the city, which has been under the control of Libyan strongman Muammar Gaddafi's forces since 2011. "There was a reason why we went in with this concept of shock and awe," Dorrian said. "It's a tactic that we've used for a long time, for the effect of its use was to ensure that the people who were most likely in contact with the leadership knew that it was somebody that they could not trust." The "shock and awe" strategy also allowed NATO forces to maintain a high degree of secrecy around their operations. "It is critical in the event of an attack
