The discovery and characterization of angiotensin receptors in brain, pituitary, adrenal and vascular tissues has modified the concept of blood pressure regulation by the brain and the pituitary-adrenal axis. The local cerebral and peripheral functions of angiotensin II have been elucidated in normal conditions, during inflammation, ischemia and hypertension, and after brain injury. Besides vascular actions, angiotensin II may exert direct actions on the pituitary and adrenal glands. Although the system appears to involve the pituitary-adrenal axis, the central control of the renin angiotensin system is likely to involve several pathways. Although data are limited, this local control system may be useful in cases of secondary hypertension, in which changes in the hypothalamus or pituitary gland occur. In addition, angiotensin II and its type-specific receptor blockers represent a possible new class of antihypertensive drugs. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electronic apparatus such as a notebook-sized personal computer, which has an electronic unit such as an arithmetic unit integrated into a main unit. 2.
