Q: OpenDDS KX system cannot open localhost port for listening I am working on the OMDK X platforms. I have a client side OMDK and a server side OMDK. On a windows 7, I run the client side first and it can correctly connect to the server side via localhost port. But when I run the client side first, and then the server side, I am trying to build the client side, it always shows an error "Unable to open the socket to localhost (port:8000)" and the listener endpoints on the server side never start up. I have tried all possible combinations of localhost, localhost:8000, 127.0.0.1, and all other combinations possible. I think it is something with firewall setting. I have enable the firewall in windows in the advanced setting, so firewall is enabled. But I have also tried enabling the firewall in the omdk client and the omdk server, to no avail. Do you know any other possible reasons that can cause this? I'm in a very fix situation. Thanks so much. A: The error message indicates that the server is trying to listen on port 8000. It is entirely possible that the OMDK clients are not configured to bind to all addresses on the network interface, only to 127.0.0.1. Also, the port that your server binds to needs to be specified. It is not appropriate to use 8000. The present invention generally relates to integrated circuits, and particularly, to an integrated circuit having a plurality of semiconductor dice. Integrated circuits typically include a die, which includes a semiconductor material such as silicon or gallium arsenide. The die also includes a plurality of bond pads on the surface of the die. Each bond pad is typically coupled with one or more input/output circuits, which are located in a separate lead frame. For example, a lead frame typically includes a plurality of leads, which are electrically connected to the bond pads of the die. Each lead is coupled with the lead frame using an electrically conductive material such as solder. Each lead of the lead frame is coupled to a power source, such as a voltage supply, for providing power to the integrated circuit. A power bus bar is also typically provided to a bond pad of the die, which routes the power to the die. Because the integrated circuit die includes a plurality

Q: Can I modify a Salesforce.com Worklight adapter with a workspace? I have a project that developed with Worklight Studio 6.0 and we installed it into our QA environment. I made some changes in adapter code that I need to deploy into our production instance and in order to do it I need to modify the adapter code and deployment configuration (adding some parameters and changing the value of some variables), but I need to be able to do it without touching the source code of my changes. So I found out that I could edit the source code of my project and modify the adapter code in situ. But the problem is that I have a workspace, so the modified code is not recognized by Worklight Studio. And I can't modify source code in place, because the workspace is protected. The question is, can I modify a Salesforce.com adapter code that I develop with Worklight Studio using a workspace? A: You can indeed modify the source code of an adapter in a workspace - just make sure you understand the implications. If you do this, the version which you have made changes to (the one from the workspace) will be deployed to the server, but there will also be a corresponding cloned copy in the workspace that you can continue to modify. Obviously, the changes to the code are not automatically (re-)processed when you deploy the version back from the workspace to the server, but as you have already done that in your question, that should not be a problem. If you later clone the server, you will also end up with a cloned copy of the workspace's (app) source code that you can modify (as you are already doing). The invention pertains to the field of computer systems. More particularly, the invention pertains to a method and system for controlling access to a network. Computer system users employ a variety of different types of computing devices to send and receive messages via electronic mail, to surf the world wide web, and to use various other computer applications. For example, over the last several years, the world wide web has become increasingly popular, due in part to the development of communication systems that support the ability to connect millions of computers around the globe. The world wide web is a collection of information resources on the Internet, also referred to as the "Web" or the "HTTP" (Hypertext Transfer Protocol) web. A web server makes web pages available to
