(Source: Internet Archive) History of Photoshop Photoshop, previously known as the Advanced Photo System, was developed by the digital imaging company Adobe. It was released in 1984. This was part of a suite of Photoshop and Illustrator applications which were a descendent of the typesetting program Adobe Illustrator. The word Photoshop wasn't actually in use until it was adopted by an author for use in his book, The author was a photographer who liked the name. It was an appropriate acronym for the program, which allowed the name to be pronounced in its current form. "Photoshop" is a portmanteau of "photo" and "edit." Adobe was not involved in the book's creation. After the initial release, a Macintosh version of Photoshop was produced, and it was a critical success, so other versions were released for other operating systems. The Windows version proved to be a success even before Photoshop was released for the Macintosh. As with most photo editing software, the relatively new Photoshop initially grew rapidly among graphic artists. Photoshop was utilized for photo retouching and the development of new photographs. As the software and its quality grew, it continued to grow as well, and it eventually overtook Corel's desktop publishing (DTP) program QuarkXPress as the industry standard. The original version of Photoshop was both a raster image editor and a vector graphic editor, but the term "raster" was not yet in use and "vector graphics" was not a widely known term. The program was, however, capable of working in either of these two modes at any time. Compression Photoshop's historical development included the design of a data format known as "image compression." More than 20 years later, several other image file formats commonly used today were designed, including GIF, JPEG, BMP, TIFF, and PSD. Photoshop started with a "ROMP" (raster object model) file, which encoded an image as a rasterized bitmap. Soon a "ROL" (raster output) file was introduced. This binary data file encoded the image as a series of bitmaps, which would later be accessed and copied just like any other bitmap image file. Photoshop and other early software editors used files encoded in this way, a format that was commonly referred to as "ROMP." This was the only format Photoshop supported for many years. This format is the instrument is a nullity. Commonwealth v. Smith, 258 Pa.Super. 124, 392 A.2d 809 (1978). *844 Generally, a minor daughter cannot be a beneficiary under her mother's will, since she is not entitled to take from the mother because she cannot inherit from the mother under the laws of intestate succession. However, this is not the case in Pennsylvania. If a will includes a residuary clause, then the words "children and issue" are construed to mean "issue," and only issue can take under the residuary clause. In a recent case, Estate of Reilly, 338 Pa.Super. 323, 487 A.2d 900 (1985), this Court was faced with a will similar to the one in the case at bar. In Reilly, the testatrix named her only daughter, Caroline L. Reilly, as a beneficiary, along with the Executrix of her estate. The Executrix then set up a trust for Caroline, and another trust, the trust at issue in this case, for a son. The trust was valid and was in operation at the time of the testatrix's death. The son was an only child, and he left no lineal descendants. He died without leaving a will, and under Pennsylvania law, the son's estate escheats to the Commonwealth. The son died after the testatrix's death, but before the trust had been fully funded, and Caroline Reilly's share of her mother's estate was paid to the Commonwealth. The Reilly court pointed out that, even though the son's estate escheated, under Pennsylvania law, the daughter was entitled to receive a share of the testatrix's estate. The court reasoned that the terms of the will (including the residuary clause) and the trust established a situation where the son had no legal heir. The court pointed out that when the son died, his estate escheated to the Commonwealth, and "daughter (Caroline) was entitled to receive Caroline's share of her mother's estate, $50,000, under the terms of the will, the trust, and under the laws of intestate succession." Estate of Reilly, 338 Pa.Super. at 328, 487 A.2d at 902. The trust at issue in the case at bar is, however, slightly different from the trust in Reilly. Carol B. Cavanaugh was the primary and residual beneficiary under the trust, and her brother was the sole income beneficiary. Both

Q: Load Calendar from Web Service in a MVC View I have a calendar in MVC View which I want to load from a web service. The calendar is not limited to just specific months. I want to be able to load different views of it, i.e. - Daily - Monthly - Yearly Currently I load the calendar using the following code in my controller: public ActionResult Calendar(string term, string start, string end) { if (term!=" " && start!=" " && end!=" ") { DateTime startDate = DateTime.Parse(start); DateTime endDate = DateTime.Parse(end); int year = startDate.Year; int month = startDate.Month; int week = startDate.DayOfWeek; int day = startDate.Day; ViewBag.Symbol = "N"; ViewBag.Start = startDate; ViewBag.End = endDate; ViewBag.Trial = false; ViewBag.Products = ViewBag.ProductsList; TempFunctions.DateCalendar calendar = new TempFunctions.DateCalendar(term, startDate.AddDays(-1), endDate); return View(calendar.Calendar); } else { return HttpNotFound(); } } This works and it populates the calendar correctly. My question is how do I go about loading a different view of the calendar, i.e. daily, monthly, yearly, etc. I'm not so familiar with how I would go about generating that view of the calendar on my mvc view. A: Would try with below and see if it is helpful: public ActionResult Calendar(string term, string start, string end
