A _.psd_ file is a Photoshop native file format. It is similar to a bitmap image in that it's a pixel-by-pixel representation of an image. Photoshop files are always saved with a. _psd_ file extension. The Photoshop native file format is saved with the. _psd_ file extension. A _.psd_ file is read only. A Photoshop native file can't be opened and edited in any other way. A layered Photoshop file is saved with the. _psd_ file extension. The file is layered, which means that its layers have a particular order that's easy to work with. The layers can be rearranged, turned off or on, or made visible or invisible. This ability to rearrange and manipulate layers is a huge benefit of a layered Photoshop native file format over the bitmap format. (See the section "Image files" for more on working with bitmap files.) In addition to the native Photoshop file format, Photoshop also supports a variety of other image formats, such as GIF, JPEG, TIFF, and PNG. When an image is saved, an extension is appended to the file name to indicate the format it is saved in. For example, the following icon is an. _psd_ file. The preceding icon is a.jpeg file. Use Photoshop in the following ways: Photoshop Extension Files The most common way Photoshop is used to edit images is by using a Photoshop extension file. To create such a file, create a new document of the desired size and resolution. For example, a 2,500 × 2,500-pixel file may be created. Next, select the Brush tool and then load the image file you would like to use (see the preceding section for more on choosing image files). The image you use doesn't have to be loaded in a layer; you may simply place the image in your image window. The image will appear in the layers panel. To apply the brush, click to set the foreground and background colors and then click and drag a freeform brush (a brush that follows the contours of your image), or you may go to the Brush menu and choose any of the available brushes. When you're done painting the image, choose File⇒Save or press Ctrl+S. Select a file format from the Save File as Type drop-down list. The Options

Advanced topical retinoids: how can we provide safe, effective treatment for actinic keratoses? Actinic keratoses (AK) are characterized by their propensity for recurrence and for development of squamous cell carcinomas (SCC). Current therapy, consisting of curettage and imiquimod, promotes SCC development. Recently, a new class of retinoids, termed topically administered retinoids or TARs, has been developed to treat AK, and they are shown to have fewer side effects than standard-dosage retinoids. TARs act on keratinocytes and reduce inflammation of AKs. These compounds are therefore more appropriate than currently available retinoids for the treatment of AK. In this article, the authors review the pharmacological properties of TARs. Although the mechanism of action of TARs is not clearly understood, they have been shown to be able to promote apoptosis and inhibit the cell cycle. The TARs seem to exert a direct and long-lasting effect on keratinocytes. The main effects of TARs in the skin are to control inflammation and proliferation of the basal and suprabasal keratinocytes. Clinical studies with TARs in patients with AK show good clinical results, with generally good tolerability. The first TARs registered in the US appear to be safer and more effective than the standard-dosage retinoids currently used for treating AK. This class of TARs is a promising alternative to treat AK, with minimal side effects. However, continued long-term use and efficacy studies are warranted. The optimal dosing and safety of TARs are yet to be determined.Determination of ATP, ADP, AMP and adenosine in plasma by ion-pair liquid chromatography with fluorometric detection. A method for the determination of ATP, ADP, AMP and adenosine in plasma using ion-pair liquid chromatography (LC) with fluorescence detection is described. The method is based on the enzymatic conversion of ATP and ADP to ADP-5'-phosphopentomolybdate (DPP). After the reaction, nucleotides are separated from inorganic phosphate and adenosine (internal standard) by anion-exchange chromatography using a phenyl/triazole resin as a chromatographic support. The fluorescence of the hydrolyzed DPP is measured using a Hitachi F - 3210 fluorescence
