NOTE: this is a crack that works with the original original v3.0 version software.Q: Update OpenCV with homebrew I'm trying to install opencv2.4.3 with homebrew on an OS X Mavericks VM I'm running. I've installed all prerequisites with brew install --build-from-source --with-python2 --with-python3 opencv. Despite all the "green" build steps being successful, I still have 2.4.1 installed. This of course means that my homebrew install is not functional. $ brew info opencv opencv: stable 4.3.1 /usr/local/Cellar/opencv/4.3.1 (5 sources): /usr/local/Cellar/opencv/4.3.1 (5 sources): $ brew update Error: Your local values do not match our servers' requirements. OpenCV has not been built with security enabled. So to bring this issue up for clarity, my question is: Is homebrew supporting update of it's own install? If so, how do I enable that functionality? A: So the answer is that you do not have to do a brew update in order to do a homebrew update. It seems I was confused because when I ran brew update, it was in response to the brew info opencv command. $ brew info opencv opencv: stable 4.3. 0cc13bf012

So I tried it like this : //disable button $('#').attr('disabled', 'disabled'); //reseta the button $('#').removeAttr('disabled'); but the second one doesn't remove the disabled attribute properly. I tried it a couple of times and it just doesn't work. I have looked at the official documentation for the aria-disabled attribute. I don't think my jQuery code is correct. Why does the second one not work? A: Update to the following: $(document).ready(function() { $("#").prop("disabled", false); $("#").removeAttr("disabled"); }); You need to set it to false, if you want to remove the disabled attribute
